is reported that Yur WEYER the Russian political Ormson (Monarchist), made a tri to Faris in early October. The purpose of this trip, according to ELECTON, was to arrange for a solem meeting to celebrate the "Day of Non-appearament", a day of protest by the enigration against the Soylet Regime which is usually observed in the period November 7-11. This celebration in Paris was planned to coincide with a statement of the contraction of the similar observance in Western Germany. The first group that layer approached was Melganov's, but he reportedly met with a rather uncooperative and critical reception. In Melganov's view it was impossible to organize at such short not se a worthwhile observation of a day of this nature. The following rossons were cited as partinent:

- a. The leading anti-Soviet Russians of the Paris colony were scheduled to leave for Germany to attend coremonies there.
- Three weeks was outirely too short a time to organise anything worthwhile.
- Hardly any politically prominent figures would be available to attract a real sudience.
- 2. Meyer is cited as expressing great indignation at this point of view, since he was afraid that a refusal to participate would "produce an exceedingly unfavorable impression on the Americans." He told the Melgunov group in considerable bitterness that he would negotiate with the PINNEE BUSSE group, and if that failed the "Americans" would naturally turn to GULEVICH and his non-existent organization of Oppressed Peoples.
- 3. According to Melgunov, PENSEE RUSSE rejected Mayer's suggestions on exactly the same grounds that the Melgunov group did:
